YOST HOUSE/ GEMMILL HOUSE

1833-1839

MARYLAND LINE

PRIVATE

The Yost-Gemmill House is a spacious, two-story plus attic, vernacular style house of mid-19th Century origin. The first structures found on this lot occur in the 1841 tax ledger, charged to Jacob Yeost. The Yost house appears on the 1850 map and also in the 1852 tax ledger. There was also a shop mentioned in testimony taken in 1854. Dr. Ephraim Bell bought the house, followed in 1876 by William T. Hendrix, and in 1883 John Gemmill, in 1892, Elizabeth M. Wilson. There have been five or six subsequent owners. The composition shingles were covered with aluminum siding in late 1979. This is a very boxy house, of bare and blank appearance. In 1980, a small, one-story, gable-roofed extension of vertical board was added at the northwest end of the basic historic house.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Yost-Gemmill House is a spacious, two-story plus attic vernacular style house of very plain appearance. It has apparently been much refurbished, losing any flavor of its original period in the process. The outer covering was, until recently, composition shingles of a yellowish tone, but in November of 1979, during the survey photography trips, it was undergoing further repairs that covered the shingles with a yellowish aluminum siding.

The main block is five bays across, two bays deep. The layout is apparently side-hall plan, the front door being located in the second bay from the south; if this is a converted duplex house, there was probably no formal plan.

There is a one-story, shed-roofed front porch across the entire main facade, wrapping around the entire south end. The porch is only about a foot above grade, and separated by plain posts. All windows are 1-over-1 double-hung sash types, set in plain frames, replacements of whatever Victorian window frames existed in the past.

The roof is gabled, with slightly overhanging eaves and very short eave returns. At attic level at each end is one gable end, double-hung sash window with 1-over-1 lights. At the southern end of the house, at the apex of the gable, one Victorian scroll bracket survived at the north end. Roofing material is green rubber tile.

A one-story rear wing, one bay deep, extends to the east, flush with the north end facade. Another irregularly shaped one-story projection is attached to that wing. The foundation is barely visible, and has been covered with applied concrete.

This house presents a very bare and blank appearance. It has neither shutters nor decorative elements. This was apparently used as a dual or duplex house, because the county's "house numbers" office shows a house split down the middle, assigned two street numbers, neither of which were posted at the time of the survey.

In 1980, a small frame, gable-roofed extension of vertical board was added at the northwest end of the house, flush with the street facade.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Yost House is a plain but typical house of mid-19th Century origin, an example of main street architecture in a small country town. It has to be assumed that no house stood here in 1833 when no town lot owned by a Yost is found in the assessor's field book of Old District 5. (1) However, in March 1840, Charles and Elizabeth Yost sold two lots binding on an alley and on the eastside of the Turnpike to Jacob Yost for $300. (2) The Yosts had paid $20 and $21, for those lots in 1832 and 1834, respectively.

The 1841 Assessor's Field Book showed that Jacob Yeost (sic) had a lot and improvements valued at $300 in the village of New Market. (3) The 1850 map by J. C. Sidney also showed the Yost house and the 1852 Assessment valued the improvements at $550. Like many other town residents, Yost kept a cow and two hogs. (4)

On January 30, 1854, Jacob Yost died intestate and his daughter, Mary, was sued by Charles K. Yost to force sale of the estate. Testimony showed that the deceased had "left a house and lot situated in New Market in Baltimore County near the Pennsylvania Line." (5) The trustee advertised the property in the Baltimore County Advocate and Baltimore Clipper prior to a sale made on January 1855 and sold to Dr. Ephraim Bell for $550. The trustee's ad described it as a "dwelling house and shop" located "between the lots of Dr. Bell and Messrs. Adam Krout and G. W. Yost." There was 7-1/2 perches of road frontage. (6)

The house is an unidentified square north of the Ann Morris house on the 1877 atlas plate of District 7. Dr. Bell's heirs, the Hursts and Defords, sold this property to William T. Hendrix in April of 1876. (7) The 1876 assessment showed Hendrix with two shoats, one buggy, harness, and a silver watch. (8) The Hendrix lot is also shown in an 1880 plat of the town filed in a local proceedings. (9)

Hendrix sold to John Gemmill in 1883. (10) In 1892, Elizabeth Gemmill sold to Elizabeth M. Wilson. (11) The 1896 tax ledger showed Thomas M. Wilson with an acre and a frame dwelling and frame stable. (12) The 1911 ledger showed Wilson with 3-1/2 acres. (13) T. W. Wilson appeared as a veterinary surgeon in the 1915 State directory. (14) In 1914, Wilson sold to H. Curtis Krout, shown as postmaster and general storekeeper in the same directory. (15) The property was then two lots and changed hands for $2,000.

The 1918 tax ledger showed Harry C. Krout with:

3-1/2 acres on old York rd in New Market adj.
Mrs. King
N. & Wiley Marsteller E. @ $78 60/100 Per a	$275
Dwelling	961
Barn	953
2 Outbldgs	100. (16)

This property passed through the hands of C. Glen Krout, Helen Gladys Anderson, and Ramsey V. and Jennie B. Gemmill, and Ramsey V. Gemmill, Jr. (17) The house was being covered with aluminum siding in October of 1979 when photographed for the MHT study.
